HORSE IN A CESSPOOL.

Chinese Consul's Steed Falls Through Stable Floor.

At 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon the Chinese Consulate on Beretania street, opposite Thomas Square, was deserted The Consul's horse, a valuable animal, was standing in the outhouse that serves him as a stable, and peacefully ruminating over his Sunday treat of kiawe beans, when the ground suddenly gave way beneath his feet and the astonished equine found himself standing up to his head in a cesspool that was not known to exist at that point. None of the Orientals seemed to have discovered the accident until Mr. Lewis, who was attracted by the groans of the unfortunate animal, came into the consulate grounds to investigate. The whole neighbohood invaded the grounds as spectators during the even-opening of the cesspool had been entirely uncovered, and the head of the imprisoned animal could be seen looking up at his rescuers. There was an occasional pitiful whinny.

Late last night the volunteer rescuers gave up their attempt, after Vida had descended into the pit in an endeavor to fasten a sling around the belly of the horse, which only succeeded in making him an object to be avoided. The horse at midnight had been in the New Evangelist at growing weaker, the Chinamen still digging at the cesspool in an attempt to make an incline up which the animal could be dragged.

THE GRAND JURY.

DOPE SMUGGLERS ARE PANICKY

Want to Ride Reporter on a Rail for Writing Facts.

When Deputy Sheriff Chillingworth saw an item in an evening paper on Saturday, calling the Advertiser's story of wholesale opium smuggling a "fake," he was greatly amused.

"This city is full of opium, full of Hong Kong opium. I know where it is coming from and how it gets into the country. If I told some of the things know it would be seen that some people who are not in the least suspected by their intimate friends are smuggling Heng Kong opium into the country. It is not for me to tell all I know, however; this much I will say, that what I have already stated in regard to the smuggling business, I am prepared to

It might be of interest to say that the letter published in the Advertiser on Saturday and signed by "Naturalized Citizens of Hawaiian-Chinese Parentage," stated the name of one party, high in office, who had smuggled a lot of the opium. The name was withheld in the printed article, however. A number of men on the waterfront when they heard that someone had given a clue to the press concerning the smuggling combine, got together on Fort street and endeavored to work each other up to a point of sufficient courage to do bodily harm to the reporter who handled the story. They decided to find out the reporter's name and then to treat him to a dose of tar and feathers or some similar medicine. They have since been advised to be

Incidentally an innocent man, who had heard nothing of the smuggling until he had read of it in the Advertiser, was accused by certain interested news to the reporter. The man in ques-
